~~The~~ ~~strangest~~ ~~journey~~ ~~in~~ ~~my~~ ~~life~~.
"A journey is best measured in friends rather than in miles"- he said, smiling. After all we've been through I couldn't be mad at him, but that line left me <sup>slightly</sup> irritated. Only after would I fully understand the meaning of that statement, but before that...

I've actually never met him face to face before. While I was looking for a travel partner, I've come across specialized website and it wasn't long until I've found Mike on it. After a short conversation on the internet we've reached agreement on crucial things such as price split and departure date. Everything went well at the ~~time~~ moment.
Since we would set off after several weeks, we had some time to know each other. To me Mike seemed as a calm and sensible person. I've discovered that we shared some hobbies and interests, particularly, snowboarding, the very thing that this journey was planned for. In my country there was a lack of high snowy places where I can freely do this activity and we were looking forward to practice it in our destination in northern Europe. We have stuck to each other, sharing our travel experience and memories on the internet for long hours.

When the time came, we've met in the airport, both burdened by heavy bags and suitcases. "Prepared for everything?" he laughed. I've taken a look at one specific one. <sup>that he was carrying very carefully</sup> He was carrying it very carefully and seemingly. When we've taken our seats at the plane he suddenly changed his face - his eyes were filled with fear - "I lost it! The snowboard my father gifted me..." He looked on me and I understood that he was looking for help. "The journey will wait?" I thought. After several hours of trying to find it, we succeeded, but our flight was certainly missed. You could say I lost my opportunity, but I don't regret it. For us it was a journey, even if we travelled no miles, and this journey will continue just as our friendship.
