Flight to Los Angeles

I was a physicist that worked in M.I.T. But in the morning my boss told me about my appointment. You are going to take a part in string theory research with experienced and qualified scientist Barry Johnson in Cal-Tech. university - he told. Moving to Los Angeles was easy because I hadn't any connection with Boston, besides my job. But the real problem for me was the thing that I was going to work in group with other person. To be honest, I hadn't any friends in M.I.T. these were just the co-worker and I only talked with them about job. I collected all my stuff, bought ticket to flight, took the taxi to airport, registered to flight and sat in my spot patiently. I waited for department. I was glad that I was sitting alone in a row, so I didn't need to talk with any body. But in the last moment, men sat right next to me and minute after we were in the air. "Hi, I'm Tom. How what is your name" - he asked. With this question he instantly reminded me a kid in the kindergarten that trying to make friends. Of course I didn't respond. We sat in silence for a while but then he unfortunately asked: "Do you have any problems with connecting with people?" That question shocked me and what is shocked me even more. I responded to this. "Yes" - I responded. After I opened him, I told about my loneliness, about the fact that I didn't have any friends in school, because they didn't understand me. As it turns out Tom was on his final year of studying for Ph.D in Psychology. And he was heading to LA to continue his studying. Also, I found out that he was ~~to~~ learning human behavior at the time and asked me not having any hope that I respond. What's more odd he didn't have much friends either. I told him about my worries about group work and he gave me some advises for this. We were talking all flight long about pretty much everything. After we arrived to LA and broke up with Tom I was becoming to Barry full of confidence and ready to try Tom's tips. As for now I'm have to long-time friends Barry and Tom and also I'm ~~leaving~~ living in Los Angeles now.

The main purpose ~~to~~ for me to create this text is ~~is~~ that I'm trying to say one thought: "A journey is best measured in friends rather than miles." My personal example is great to prove this point, because here we can see that people who don't have many friend in journey could become a long-time friends.
