The greatest adventurer.

There was a to small forest somewhere in England.
And in that forest lived a rabbit and a tortoise. One day they saw birds leaving the forest to visit warmer places.
Inspired by the birds, the tortoise and the rabbit decided to travel. Before leaving, they made a small bet: whoever tells a better story about his adventures would be declared „the best adventurer of the forest". And so began their one-year adventure.

There was a village south of the forest. The rabbit ran by in the first day, but the tortoise arrives only a week after. The rabbit just ran by. The tortoise, on the other hand, decided to meet the villagers. One of them was an old traveller. He shared his memories with the tortoise and gave her a map with his favourite locations. The tortoise thanked him and set off again.

The following months she spent by visiting many the old traveller's spots and meeting with new people on the way. One kind mechanic proposed making her a small car so she could travel faster. But she refused, saying: „Being slow isn't always bad for adventure. Although visiting less places, slow travellers can gain more pleasant memories than others".

A year later, the tortoise and the rabbit met again in their forest. The rabbit said: „I have visited every corner of England in just a year, so I'm the greatest traveller of the forest!" The tortoise replied: „But do you remember anything?" The rabbit fell silent, recognizing his lack of new memories.
The tortoise shares her mem experiences and said:
