Handwritten red marks: a vertical column of '+' and '-' signs, and a large '2' with '0' and '10' written next to it.

A volume of friendship.

A boy enters a convenience store. He quickly rushes to a shelf, filled with different magazines. Desperately moving his gaze eyes across the shelf He lets out a huge sigh. "No luck..." He says. The boy's name is Brad and the thing He was searching for was the newest volume of the hit comic book series "Sharkboy". He was unable to get one, which means that he will have no place in a conversation among his peers until He reads one. Jim was petrified at the idea of being an outcast for a day, minimum. Jim decided not to give up and look in another store and if he fails, buy again with newly-found determination Brad sets out on a journey.

I had been a few hours since Brad entered the first store. Dark settles in, marking the soon arrival of night. However, Brad's hands are still empty. The dead of night is no place a 11-year-old boy such as himself and He knew that full well. The fear of the night and the fear of solitude clashed. The latter came out on top so he passed on.

While going pass a bus stop like any other He met a familiar face. The individual reached out first. "Oh, Hey Brad." "Damien," answered Brad enthusiastically. "Did not expect to see you here so late in the night. Don't you like somewhere else?" "Yes, I do. It's just..." Brad stopped talking. Telling Damien just a classmate was not an option so he lied: "I am running errands for my mum." "Don't lie to me. It is too late." Getting caught re-hatched this early plus the exhaustion was too much so he told Damien everything. Much to Brad's surprise Damien just laughed: "Getting worried up over something so insignificant. Come on let's go to my place. My mum got me one why not read it together?" (M. you. thank)

Handwritten red notes: '300w.' and the number '7'.

Brad almost in tears, agreed.

Then it was in his hands the jewel he spent so much time looking for. Damien and he read it almost in an instant. After his heroic escapades the hero SharkBoy said: "A journey is best measured in friends rather than miles."

Brad could not agree more.
