Eve and ~~our~~ Russian spirit

while others ~~always~~ are always trying to run away as far as it's possible from our country on summer holidays, my friend, Eve, and I had always dreamt of an adventure that would happen right here, in Russia. Surrounded by nature diversity and partly familiar places, we wanted to forget about everything and live in a moment.

And it happened. She flew to me and that's ~~how~~ ^{what} we decided to do after: drive straight ^{while} to eastern parts of Russia. We couldn't imagine anything more magnificent and empowering than the mountains of Altai, wild half-tropical ~~the~~ forests of Dalni Primorskiy Krai and sometimes unbearably cold Northern Region with its rare villages where we came almost in winter by the end of the trip. You, reader, might be wondering: wasn't it easier to fly somewhere and get a normal rest ^{rather} than risk everything and see nothing but the same country? And my answer is ^{no}, not for us. We are real travelers and got that spirit that almost everyone ^{else} lost.

While meeting ~~the~~ a tiger in the forest, we were not afraid because it's part of ~~that~~ ^{the} nature that we're supposed to protect and love ^{despite} the danger. That's the message that everybody must learn.

Undoubtedly, all the things described wouldn't be possible without ^{no} my friend so that's why they got a saying: "A journey is best measured in friends rather than miles." Courageous, brave friends inspires us ~~and~~, make us ~~braver~~ more brave and capable of anything.

That was my story, the story of a true nature-lover with an eager ^{to} endless adventure.
