Library service proposals

Hello, I am writing in regard of our school's library. As you may know, the library soon will be expanding and I happened to think of some ideas on what new service our library can provide, so please bear with me.

Blind reading

First of all, nowadays it is getting harder to make children read the genres that are new to them. Mostly, they choose something they are familiar with. So why not add a bit of mystery to the process of picking out the right book? Try wrapping a book in some wrapping paper. Then, write a short summary of the plot on that paper. It is surely going to catch the student's attention. Plus, they might start being more experimental with the genres they read, so no books in the library will be unloved or forgotten.

Friendly competition

Second of all, kids sometimes tend to be very competitive and reward-oriented, which brings me to my next point suggestion. Hosting an annual book reading competition with little prizes is sure going to get the students motivated and wanting to read more. If students are reading more, that means they are visiting the library more often, while gathering knowledge in a fun manner.

All in all, these are some of the ideas that I came up with in hope that they would improve our school or help our students, so I hope they
