Open space for studying

Introduction

School is a place where students spend almost half of the day. It means that all facilities should be as much comfortable as possible.

Description of the new service

The library could provide an open space for studying. A quiet, light, cosy room with computers and the Internet is meant by "open space".

Practical information

Expanding the library this way requires some special equipment:

- Electronic devices, such as computers, laptops, tablets are necessary for group work of projects.
- Free Wi-Fi to provide access to the Internet fully or only to certain educational websites.
- Snacks, like sweets, fruit, crackers, so students can speed up their brains a little bit.
- Drinks, like water, tea or coffee, are also needed.

Benefits

Surely, it would benefit the majority of the students and here's why:

- They wouldn't have to arrange meetings to do group projects, because it would be possible to go to the library with your class mates and do everything there.
- It would be much easier for some to do homework, as not everyone has a computer.
- Friends would be able to relax together, of course, following some rules, for example, not speaking loud.
- Book lovers would have an opportunity to enjoy their favourite stories with a cup of tea without having to go <sup>some</sup> anywhere else.

- Moreover, there are advantages for school as well:
- The quality of homework and projects would go higher.
  - More students would become interested in the library itself.
  - Even teachers could use the equipment for work.

Conclusion

Providing the open space is the most beneficial and easily organised way of expanding the library. I highly recommend the planning committee to think about this option.
