Jane Baker and ^tthe value of home.

Punc.
SP.

I: I am honored to meet you today, miss Baker, Would you mind answering some questions regarding your recent life in our town and the new book you are writing?

JB: I am pleased to meet you too. I will gladly answer any questions you have.

I: Thank you. The first question is "How did you feel when you first saw your hometown after living abroad?"

Punc.

JB: Well, my emotions were pretty complicated at that moment. I definitely felt nostalgic witnessing familiar streets, parks and people. But I also felt the passage of time because of due to many changes that happened in my hometown while I was away.

SP.

I: Speaking about changes, which ^{of} ~~one~~ surprised you the most?

JB: It was definitely the amount of public space designated for children. When I lived here, there weren't as many playgrounds and skate parks.

Gr.

I: It is known that you are writing a new book about our town. Could you give us a quick synopsis?

SP.

JB: Sure! The story follows a group of children discovering secrets of the town, learning the value of friendship along the way.

I: Sounds exciting! What inspired you to write this book?

JB: The plot and characters ~~was~~ ^{were} based on my childhood memories. I remember playing with kids from the neighbourhood, searching for secret bases and imagining different creatures. These are my biggest inspirations.

I: Why did you choose your hometown as the location?

JB: I wanted to show the children of the town that it's
